In recent months, graffiti tags in Doon, a rural town just east of the Queen's School at Flin Flon, have been appearing in the Doon area. Most of these graffiti are long cross and appear on both private and public buildings and also on houses and trees.

The graffiti shown is on the new bridge on Old Mill Road just east of the Queen's School at Flin Flon.

The question that arises is whether this is the work of the Ku Klux Klan (KKK) and if it is a component of just simple graffiti written by teenagers.

With the kids out on especially after school days, parents are becoming more concerned.

On the other hand, if it is the work of the KKK or their sympathizers, what happens?

It is known that the KKK may have a base in the Northern Waterloo area, also known as a cross-hatching of Germans.

Are these kids just recently injured teenagers, or are they supporters of the KKK. The school is located just west of the Northern Waterloo area in Southwestern Ontario. With an office of about 2000 people in this area, can any of these evidence be the school? And if so, are the residents of this area just going to let it happen - right under our noses?
